Edna St. Vincent Millay, born in 1892 and died in 1950, was an American lyrical poet, playwright, and feminist. She was known for her daring, versatile writing and was a winner of the second annual Pulitzer Prize for Poetry in 1923. Her work includes plays, poetry, and essays, and she was a significant figure in the literary scene of her time.

The collected poems of Edna St. Vincent Millay were first put together by her sister after her death and were originally published in 1956. The volume, titled "Collected Poems: Edna St. Vincent Millay (Harper, 1956)", contains her poetry collected from 1923 to 1950. The poems include "My candle burns at both ends", "Time does not bring relief you all have lied", and many more.

The collected poems were edited by Norma Millay, and the book was published under the title "Collected Poems - Edna St. Vincent Millay". The collection is notable for its range and quality, featuring work that would be recognized as classic by modern standards.