WrestleMania 23, the 2007 installment of WWE’s annual SuperCard of the Superstars, was held on April 1, 2007, at Ford Field in Detroit. The event was a joint-brand event with the WWE and other wrestling organizations. The main event of the event was a championship match between John Cena and The Great Khali for the WWE Championship.

The event was a major success, with over 70,000 fans in attendance and millions of fans watching on television. The event was also a major financial success, with over $100 million in revenue generated from ticket sales, merchandise sales, and other sources.

WrestleMania 23 was a major milestone in the history of the WWE, as it marked the end of the company’s long-standing partnership with the World Wrestling Federation (WWF). The event was also a turning point for the WWE, as it marked the start of a new era of growth and expansion for the company.

In the years following WrestleMania 23, the WWE continued to grow and expand, with new events and programming being added to its offerings. The company also continued to focus on the development of its roster of stars and on building the brand that would become one of the most successful and recognizable in the world of professional wrestling.

WrestleMania 23 was a major moment in the history of professional wrestling, and it is remembered as one of the greatest events in WWE history. It marked the end of an era and the start of a new one, and it set the stage for the WWE’s continued success and growth in the years to come.